The Dinah Project: A Handbook for Congregational Response to Sexual Violence

Monica A. Coleman's book, The Dinah Project: A Handbook for Congregational Response to Sexual Violence, is a comprehensive guide for churches and religious leaders to address sexual violence within their communities. The book provides practical tools and strategies for congregations to become involved in the fight against sexual violence, including the creation of Men Against Sexual Violence (MASH) groups. It highlights the importance of involving lay leadership and offers guidance on how to support survivors of sexual violence. The Dinah Project suggests that churches can play a crucial role in combatting sexual violence by creating a safe and inclusive environment for survivors to seek support. The book is a valuable resource for anyone seeking to understand and address the issue of sexual violence in their community.
